Miscellany.
A Mother's Love.

The following description of the abduction of the child of General Viele is written by one of the participants in the affair:

On Wednesday last the shores of Lake Mahopac were the scene of an episode in real life and of a character most thoroughly melodramatic. Our readers may well remember the litigation regarding the Viele children and the conduct of Judge Barnard therein, who, having made an order for the mother to have the custody of the two youngest children, neutralized its effect by forbidding it to be entered. By arrangement between the parties, a Connecticut divorce was agreed upon, Mrs. Viele being unwilling to manufacture testimony as to the residence required by the laws of that State.
By some blunder of the lawyers, nothing was stated in the decree as to the guardianship of the children, and only one child, the youngest boy, was given to Mrs. Viele after the divorce. After escaping a trap laid to steal him from her, Mrs. Viele took him to Europe, and while there heard of her husband's marriage. With womanlike impetuosity Mrs. Viele wrote to New York that she would have the clergyman depose for violating the canons of the church by solemnizing the marriage, and that she would return at once to remove her daughter. Arriving in New York (per Vandalia), Mrs. Viele took into her confidence two lady friends of good standing and two gentlemen. One of them, rumor has it, is an officer high in the United States Army; the other, it is believed, a well known lawyer of this city. Thursday night the two gentlemen (appropriately disguised) took a run to Lake Mahopac, where General Viele resides with his newly wedded wife and former wife's children. The house of General Viele was carefully surveyed by the tourists, who learned that a Rocky Mountain bear was kept chained in the rear garden! One of our tourists, having some acquaintance with General Viele, called upon him and soon made friends with him, his new wife, and the little girl, for whose abduction these elaborate preparations were being made. To keep up their character our tourists finished up with a pedestrian excursion, and informing the clerk of the Gregory House, while paying their bills, of their intention to return the following Tuesday, they trudged off to Peekskill on foot.

Returning to New York, a pressing business engagement was made with General Viele for the following Wednesday (September 4) at the General's office. On the evening of Wednesday, the 4th of September, our military friend fulfilled ed his promise at the Gregory House, and the next morning watched the General off by the train. This he telegraphed to New York, and the forty minutes past 10 train bore from New York Mrs.
General Viele, her legal adviser, and one of the lady friends before referred to.
The military gentlemen met them at the depot Lake Mahopac, with a carriage, and the party, with many encombrances, for Mrs. Viele designed taking a long journey—what an apt word was the old Roman "impedimenta"—started round the west shore of the lake to General Viele's residence, avoiding the village by this detour, and coming upon a picnic on their road. Arriving at the General's the lawyer got down, rang the door bell, asked for the General, and being out, for Mrs. Viele number two

She, as it happened, was out driving, whereupon our lawyer, describing himself as the health officer of the district, appointed under a recent (imaginary) act of the Legislature, asked if the lady whom he was addressing could furnish him with certificates of the vaccination of any children there under fourteen years of age, and no certificates being forthcoming, asked to examine the children. Teresa was brought to him; he learnedly put on his spectacles; the right arm being shown, said the mark was so faint it must be done over again "Oh, I've made a mistake; 'tis the other arm," said Miss Viele, the oldest sister, and showed the left arm, which our doctor for the once described as very good, that it had taken very well; jotted down on his tablets the name and age of the little girl, said that the mark was very good, kissed her sweetly, and asked to see the other child, said to be seven years old. She was out with Mrs. Viel-(No. 2); would be home in half an hour.
"Well," said the doctor, "I'll make some other calls. My time is, of course, very short, and I'll be back by half past two." Stepping back to his carriage, he drove around—returned in twenty minutes.
Miss Viele appeared at the door, leading little Emily by the hand, whom she took into the parlor to unfatten her dress and exhibit her arm. Our "doctor" made the agreed-on signal—military friend and Mrs. Viele rushed out, and the moment they reached the door, "Mrs. Viele," said our doctor lawyer, "here is your child."
"My darling," said the yearning mother, and quick as thought she lifted the child in her arms and bore her towards the carriage. But Miss Viele, though taken by surprise, proved herself a heroine. One can only regret that her courage and presence of mind were not displayed upon the proper side. She flew after her mother, but was stopped by the two gentlemen, on whom she furiously turned, tearing the coat of one to tatters, and inflicting a severe blow on the forehead of the other. Thinking that Mrs. Viele had sufficient said, the gentlemen now let go their hold, and again Miss Viele darted after her mother and sister, and would have caught them had not the lawyer seized her round the waist. Miss Viele's foot tripped, and she fell heavily on the gravel, bearing the gentlemen about her to the ground, but seizing his hat—a very peculiar one, borrowed expressly to mislead—she carried it off in triumph.
The party drove off, the mother kissing her child frantically, and for a time all went merry as a marriage bell, except that nothing would induce the driver to hasten his horses, he evidently doubting whether all was right, and apparently wishing himself and his team well out of the business. Presently our lady friend cried out: "We are followed!" Our lawyer, looking over the carriage, saw a man coming on at a hard gallop with a revolver in hand, and whispered to the military friend to draw his revolver.
Down came the pursuer, and leveling the revolver at the gentleman, demanded the child. The military gentleman, coolly presenting his piece, said in a threatening tone, "Don't shoot; drop your muzzle," and down it went; the horseman galloping on to the picnic party, and appealing to them for aid. Some three or four stepped into the road to stop the carriage, though this was not necessary, as darkey pulled up, and refused to proceed till the matter was settled.

Several threatening faces now approached the carriage and demanded the child. "Never!" said Mrs. G-n-ral Viele, drawing her elf up; "Never! it is my child, and you shall not hurt my heart before you take it!"

The lawyer jumped down, and telling Mrs. Viele to appeal to the woman, and he went among the men and addressed them. The battle was won, but meanwhile Mrs. Viele had been addressing the mothers there, and one of them, a leader among them, soon said to her, "You keep the child." "I will while I have life," said Mrs. Viele, passionately; and the lawyer, turning to the good woman, asked her to speak to the men which she did with effect. The noble-looking man before referred to, standing six foot four, and broad in proportion, advanced to the horses' heads and said "drive on!" Still the driver hesitated; the lawyer jumped into the carriage and urged him on; military friend ordered him on; the horseman with the revolver (having since dismounted) made a motion to spring to the horses' heads, but was held back by the noble looking man, and another—one on each side, holding him by his coat cuffs—and the lawyer, half drawing his sword stick, told him that if he again dared to stop the carriage he would put the sword through him. The party drove on to Peekskill, but reflecting that they would have to wait over an hour and a half for the train, during which time another crowd and fuss might be got up, orders were given to the driver to go on to Montrose. This he declared his horses could not do, and some mistake being felt of him he was sent on to the depot with some of the party, while the rest took another carriage and proceeded to Garrison's, where they got safely on board the cars. Sufficient time was given to General Viele to procure a habes corpus, and at the same time an intimation was given him of the nature of the defense which could be raised, and no steps being taken, or at least none being heard of, Mrs. Viele and her child left today for Europe.—Evening Express.

Limit Your Wants.
Lord Bolingbroke, in his "Reflections upon exile," says: "Our natural and real wants are confined to narrow bounds, while those which fancy and custom create are confined to none." Young men who are just entering upon life, and forming the habits which are likely to adhere to them to its close, will do well to treasure up in their memory these true and instructive words of one of England's finest writers and most philosophic statesmen.
"Our natural and real wants are confined to narrow bounds." It is surprising how little it is that is absolutely essential to man's existence, and, if he will take an intelligent and considerate view of life, to his comfort and happiness. Intellectual enjoyments are comparatively cheap. The cultivation of the mind, which affords the highest and the only enduring satisfaction, can be pursued on an income quite insignificant for the supply of luxuries.
Our physical wants are very few, if we preserve our tastes simple, as they are by nature. To eat, to drink, to exercise, to sleep, to keep warm, and to be sheltered; a small sum will supply all these. The pleasures which are pure, and which tend to our improvement, are within the reach of almost every one.
But the wants which "fancy and custom create," as Lord Bolingbroke says, are confined to no bounds. It is against these that young men on the threshold of life should sedulously guard. Beware of luxuries and expensive habits. The gratification of them may cost you much of the labor and time which, if given to intellectual cultivation, would be more conducive to happiness. It is easy to do without that which you have never indulged in. It is hard to leave off habits, however extravagant and absurd. When you are to decide about adopting a mode or style of living, consider well whether it is certain that, without inconvenience, you will be able always to preserve it.
The only safe rule is to keep your wants within narrow bounds.

THE unpleasant odor produced by perspiration is frequently the source of vexation to persons who are subject to it.— Nothing is simpler than to remove this odor much more effectually than by the application of such costly unguents and perfumes as are in use. It is only necessary to procure some compound spirits of ammonia, and place about two table-spoonsful in a basin of water. Washing the face, hands and arms with this leaves the skin as clean and sweet as one could wish. The wash is perfectly harmless and very cheap. It is recommended on the authority of an experienced physician.

THE travelers in a balloon which recently started from Boston say that the bottom of the ocean in shoal places was distinctly visible to them while they were passing over the sea, and the abundant growth of seaweed caused the vessels to appear as if sailing in a field of grass.

THE simplicity that believes the stars are the innumerable ends of God's shining fingers piercing the heavens, is infinitely more blessed than the astute skepticism that believes nothing.

Talent is an eye-sore to tyranny. In weakness, tyranny fears it as a power; in power it hates it as a liberty.

We live in deeds, not in years; in thoughts, not in breaths.

Description of the Savior.
A correspondent of the Sunday Trans- cript a few weeks since sent to that paper the following letter from Lentulus, Governor of Jerusalem, to the Senate and people of Rome, giving a description of the person of Christ, which has never, we believe, been printed in this country, and it may, therefore, prove interesting to many readers:

"There has lately appeared in these parts a man of singular virtue, who is yet alive, named Jesus Christ, whom the Gentiles call the Prophet of Truth, and his followers call him the Son of God.
He cures all distempers and redeems the dead themselves. As to his person, he is tall and comely, of a venerable aspect, which gives both love and awe. His hair, bright and curling, flowing down his shoulders, parted in the middle, after the Nazirite mode. His countenance plain and most open; his face without spot or wr
